Yeo Hiap Seng, 1995
An exercise in valuation and risk arbitrage

In mid-1995, the Singaporean food and beverage group Yeo Hiap Seng was embroiled in a potential takeover battle. With access to the lucrative China market at stake, and powerful financial groups based in Malaysia, Indonesia and Singapore itself involved, the saga offered opportunities for profitable "risk arbitrage" for investors with the ability to place a value on the existing and potential worth of the company.

Please read the attached articles, and try to decide which is the best of the following strategies:

1. Sell your existing shares of YHS. Having bought them at an average price of S$3.60, you can make a good profit by selling out at the going price of S$4.90.

2. Buy more shares of YHS, but get ready to sell out quickly when they reach the highest level of local valuation assessments, namely S$5.30 per share.

3. Buy shares of the Malaysian group First Capital Corp, controlled by Quek Leng Chan.

4. Buy shares of Sembawang, the Malaysian government-linked company that has become a potential partner with FCC in the takeover of YHS.

5. Buy shares of Orchard Parade Holdings, the listed vehicle of the Singapore group led by Ng Teng Fong, FCC’s main rival for control of YHS.

Evaluate and comment on the potential gains and risks of each action. Be sure to relate your answers to the experience of shareholders in takeover battles in the United States and elsewhere.
The battle for Yeo Hiap Seng

High price to pay if Ng group takes up cudgels

By Goh Soo May
Koh Keat Kian

A TAKEOVER battle for the small food and beverage group Yeo Hiap Seng seems to be looming, going by the talk in the market. But if tycoon Ng Teng Fong decides to take up the cudgel thrown by rival Quek Leng Chan, it will be at a high cost.

Yesterday, YHS shares closed at $4.90, a whopping 22 cents gain from its pre-suspension price of $4.68 and a full 20 cents above the takeover offer of the consortium led by Hong Leong Malaysia's Quek Leng Chan.

Brokers reported "frequent retail interest in the stock" and at least one big retail house, May Hian James Capel, is recommending a "speculative buy" on YHS following the latest developments.

Although neither Mr Ng Teng Fong nor his listed vehicle Orchard Parade Holdings (OPH) has responded officially to the challenge, market rumour is rife that a counter offer will be made at not less than $5.

This looks the case if one takes into account Far East Organization's declaration that it had bought another 86,000 shares at $4.90 each yesterday, raising Mr Ng's stake to 23.93 per cent.

Mr Ng had shown that he is quick to seize a good opportunity when he bought into OPH, which he took control of YEO family members for control of YEO. The feud ended with MRF's group chairman Alan Yeo losing control to Mr Ng.

But the feud had also resulted in an unhappy Mr Yeo forming an alliance with OPH, which first sparked off speculation of a takeover battle when he started to accumulate YHS shares in February through First Capital Corporation (FCC).

Both Mr Ng and Mr Quek also sought and obtained approval from the shareholders of their respective listed vehicles for such an eventuality.

Everything however, appeared to have quietened down, when the two protagonists were seen to have reached some sort of an understanding when OPH and FCC announced a tie-up to develop a commercial complex in Selangor province during Prime Minister Go Chok Tong's visit to China last month.

This was especially so, when Mr Ng's son, Robert Ng, was appointed chairman of YHS less than two weeks ago.

But now, all that may just prove to be the proverbial null before the storm.

Some analysts feel that after all that Mr Ng has achieved in YHS, he will not be willing to give up without a fight.

But the question also being asked is whether Mr Ng would find it worthwhile to pit his strength against the formidable resources of the group which the Quek side has lined up.

Although the takeover bid is being launched through FCC's subsidiary Cameron, following which OPH would hold 40 per cent of Cameron while the Sembawang group, the Indonesia-Salins group and Haw Par Brothers International would hold 20 per cent each.

"Cameron's shareholding structure is such that the exercise is designed to discourage a counter-bid," said DBS Investment Research yesterday.

To obtain a majority stake of 51 per cent, Mr Ng would need to acquire a further $72.2 million shares. It would work out to over $180 million, or even more, if the share price continues to rise on the open market.

"Mr Ng will be straining his financial muscles. OPH, which has been officially appointed as the takeover vehicle, is already highly geared. But then again, if Mr Ng wants to, he is sure he can find the funds for a counter-attack," said one analyst yesterday.

It is, however, also conceivable that Mr Ng should choose to sell out at the end of the day.

Analysts said at $4.70, the Quek group is placing a premium on YHS shares relative to its Net Asset Value.

Except for listed Kay Hian James Capel which has valued the NAV at $3.50. The estimate for YHS shares by the other brokers is between $3.50 and $4.20.

"The long term prospects and the vast opportunity offered by the China market also carry with it, high-risk involved in training, marketing and distribution," said the FAB analyst of a local listed brokerage house yesterday.

She estimates that Mr Ng had paid an average price of $3.70 for his YHS shares. That would mean a profit of 41 per cent per YHS share in just a year - working out to roughly $52 million.

"That is a better return than running the competitive food business, which is having to wrestle with rising raw material costs at the moment," said the analyst.
YHS tells shareholders not to act pending advice

Teng Fong ups stake, said to be preparing counter bid of up to $5.30 a share

By Genevieve Cus

SINGAPORE — Takeover target Yeo Hup Beng (YHS) yesterday advised its shareholders not to act on a general offer, amid market speculation that property tycoon Ng Teng Fong is gearing up to make a counter bid of up to $5.30 a share.

On Monday, a consortium of corporate heavyweights led by Malaysian businessman Quick Long Chan mounted a takeover bid for the listed beverage group at $4.70 per share. Mr Quack's stake in YHS stands at 53.78 per cent.

Trading in YHS shares resumed yesterday at 2pm and the stock shot up to $5.50, just one lot traded. It closed at $4.90 on a volume of 5.92 million shares, up 82 cents on the day.

The big question is whether a counter-offer by Mr Ng, who also owns close to 25 per cent of YHS, is imminent. Most analysts believe a takeover battle looms. Salomon Brothers research director Bruce Ralph said: "History indicates that this sort of battle is rarely won on the first round."

Noting that YHS' share price is underpinned by its property assets, Mr Ralph added: "When you get an entrepreneur like this, sometimes the valuations they are willing to pay run well ahead of near-term valuations for the company."

Mr Quack's bid values YHS at $807 million. At the re-issued counter-bid of $5.30, the company would be worth $752.6 million.

Most brokers are quoting a net asset valuation for YHS ranging from $3.80 to just over $4 per share. The most aggressive valuation is by Kay Hian James Cupid (KHJC), which pegs it at $5.34.

KHJC analyst Jasmine Pang said: "Shareholders should wait and see if Mr Ng comes up with a better offer. If the rumours are right, there is very little downside."

For the second day, executives of the companies controlled by Mr Ng — Far East Organisation, Orchard Parade Holdings, Sino Land in Hong Kong and YHS itself — could not be contacted.

The Far East Organisation, however, notified the stock exchange that it acquired 86,000 shares yesterday at $4.90 apiece. This brings Mr Ng's holding to 35.27 million shares or 24.83 per cent, still below the mandatory takeover trigger point of 25 per cent.

YHS, in its statement yesterday, said it would not send out a circular of its recommendations within two weeks of its receipt of an offer document from Cameron, a subsidiary of First Capital Corporation and Mr Quack's vehicle to buy up YHS shares.

"The directors of YHS will be appointing a merchant bank to advise the shareholders of YHS on the offer," it said. "In the meantime, shareholders are advised to refrain from taking any action in relation to the offer."

If Mr Ng decides to sell his shares at the offer price of $4.70, he could gain between $32 million and $39 million as his average cost for YHS shares is believed to be between $3.60 and $3.80 apiece.

He sells in the open market at yesterday's close of $4.90, he stands to gain $40 million to $47 million.

Until recently, he and Mr Quack appeared to have reached a stalemate with Mr Ng's holding at 24.77 per cent and Mr Quack's at 25.86 per cent.

Some analysts say it would make more sense for Mr Quack's consortium to have YHS as it comprises companies owned by government-linked Sembawang Corporation, diversified Haw Par Brothers International and influential Indonesian conglomerate Salim. Their respective companies — Sembawang Industrial, Straits Maritime, Lionsturf and KMP — will each take a 20 per cent stake in Cameron, with FCC retaining a 40 per cent interest.

Mr Pong of KHJC said the consortium offered not just property development expertise in Mr Quack's FCC group, but also a deep base in the Salim group.

"The development is quite positive, because now a takeover battle will force the issue. We'll have one winner and we'll know for sure whether the YHS management is going to stay," she said.

SINGAPORE — When will embattled beverage group Yeo Hiap Seng Ltd be able to get down to business?

At about this time last year, a court hearing was being held to decide on the winding up of family company Yeo Hiap Seng Holdings, which then held a controlling share of roughly 39 per cent in YHS.

YHS Holdings was eventually wound up, signalling the loss of family control and making the group vulnerable as a takeover target. Property tycoon Ng Teng Fong, who began buying shares in the heat of the family feud last year, emerged as the controlling shareholder. Steady buying of YHS shares over the past 12 months has given him a stake to date of 24.83 per cent.

Mr Ng's faction, represented by the enlivened entrepreneur Wong Yip Yan of the Wywy group, was to usher in a new era of professional management, with Mr Wong as head of an executive committee and, more recently, with former Hewlett Packard chief Alex Chan roped in as managing director.

Recently, Mr Wong stepped aside from YHS' board "delighted with the progress and the vitality of the management team", a YHS statement said.

In a recent press briefing, Mr Chan indicated that sales were recovering, although the group had to contend with rising costs and low staff morale. YHS, however, appears to have made good progress in its China expansion with new projects in the pipeline, and it also has its Pepsi franchise extended for a year.

But just as YHS is beginning to eat its net together after last year's loss of $2.13 million, yet another sea change appears underway. If Malaysian corporate raider Quek Leng Chan — today YHS' biggest shareholder with a stake of 25.89 per cent and backed by a powerful consortium — succeeds in his takeover bid for YHS at $4.70 per share, it will spell yet another management revamp.

Whether Mr Ng will make a counter offer remains to be seen, but the sooner the ownership issue is resolved, the better. YHS must get down to the business of making money.
Why are Sembawang, Haw Par in YHS bid?

SINGAPORE — The banner around town is that Sembawang Corp chairman Philip Yeo will soon become chairman of Yeoh Tiong Seng. This is to ensure that a Yeoh — albeit from a different family — will head the listed soft drink maker.

A joke this may be, but so far it seems the best explanation why Sembawang is taking part in a hostile bid for YHS. As for what led the other parties — Haw Par Brothers International and the Salim group — to join in the YHS raid, there aren't even jokes. Analysts and traders are too puzzled by their involvement to make wisecracks.

On Monday, Sembawang said it had joined forces not just with locally-listed First Capital Corp but also with Haw Par Brothers, which once owned the listed Overseas Bank group, and Indonesian billionaire Liem Sioe Liong's Salim group to offer a record $4.70 a share for YHS.

FCC, an associate of Sembawang, is controlled by the Malaysian tycoon Quock Leng Chan and has accumulated about 25 per cent of YHS in the past few months.

The stock market had been waiting for FCC to make a bid for YHS. But it was shocked when Mr Quock brought in three partners. YHS, after all, is not such a big company that four heavyweights need to work together. At the offer price, it is valued at $667 million. Even if there is a counterbid — YHS controlling shareholder Ng Teng Fong has just put his elder son Robert as YHS chairman and may not be tempted by the profit he can make from accepting FCC's offer — commercial logic dictates that YHS should not be valued above $750 million.

FCC, capitalised at more than $1 billion and backed by Mr Quock's massive resources in Malaysia and Hong Kong, can easily swallow YHS on its own. So why the partnership? And more importantly, what prospective return could induce these partners to take on property tycoon Ng Ng by joining in the raid on YHS?

A possible answer — as all answers tend to be nowadays — is the potential for YHS brands. Mr Quock, head of Hong Leong Malaysia, is known to want to expand into the food and beverage business in a big way. He already has an interest in packaging and is said to be eyeing a controlling stake in Kian Joo, the biggest listed maker in Malaysia.

Talk was that Mr Ng was working together to take over YHS, with Mr Ng given ownership of YHS in Singapore while Mr Quock would take YHS Singapore's 40 per cent listed associate YHS Malaysia. With a greatly enlarged packaging operation and the Yeoh brands of popular drinks, Hong Leong Malaysia would be well-placed to penetrate the fast-growing F&B markets in the region, particularly in China.

Ironically, both YHS and Kian Joo were family-owned concerns that became takeover targets due to internal strife. The Yeoh clan that founded YHS has lost control of the company but the See family of Kian Joo is still fighting in the courts.

Sources say the Ng-Quock plan for YHS fell through over some disagreement. A disgruntled Mr Quock then approached ousted YHS chairman Alan Yeo to buy his Yeo stake, or so the story goes. This gave him a foothold in YHS, from which he could launch his bid to wrest the company from former partner Mr Ng and take it to China under his own steam.

The story sounds plausible. So plausible, it seems, that Philip Yeo, Wee Choo Yaw and Liem Sioe Liong are all now interested in joining Mr Quock's attack on the China consumer market through YHS.

Messrs Yeo, Wee and Liem have worked together before, such as in setting up a huge industrial park in Mr Liem's hometown in China's Fujian province. Mr Yeo and Mr Liem are also partners in the Baum and Tariant partition in Indonesia, while Mr Wee and Mr Liem are partners in running Singapore-listed United Industrial Corp and Singapore Land.

Given their history of cooperation and interest in China, it is not surprising that the three are working together again, this time with Mr Quock as the fourth partner. And Mr Quock, always out to build connections with other powerful businesses, would only be too pleased to bring them on board at YHS.

But though in theory YHS has potential in China, in practice the company has been in such bad shape that it needs a huge injection of funds, not to mention many good people, to put it back on its feet.

Is such, the choice of Sembawang and Haw Par as investors in YHS is puzzling, because both companies are in the process of digesting their new acquisitions. They have arguably already pumped too much money into too many ventures to make yet another major commitment.

Sembawang is a government-linked company (GLC) trying hard to avoid falling profit by diversifying away from the cyclical marine business. It recently took over Resources Development Corp, another GLC, and has ventured into the Internet and on-line publishing business.

Haw Par, also faced with falling profits and highly dependent on investment and interest income, is in the same boat. Searching for new ventures, it recently went into theme parks in a big way, committing itself to perhaps more than $100 million in building up the business.

It is also hard to see how the F&B business of YHS would fit with Sembawang's marine and engineering operations, or with Haw Par's leisure, trading and investment business. This is why the investment community is puzzled, and somewhat worried, by their involvement.

To ensure that such worries do not lead to a sell-off, the companies should elaborate on their rationale as soon as possible.

YELO HIAP SENG LIMITED

Yeo Hiap Seng (YHS) hit the headlines again with a long anticipated general offer being made for its shares by a consortium of four companies, led by one of the two contenders, Mr Quek Leng Chan of property-based First Capital Corporation (FCC). In a bid to extricate YHS from the other major shareholder (property-tycoon Ng Teng Fong), Mr Quek has teamed up with Sembawang Corporation, Haw Par Brothers International (HPBI) and Indonesia's Salim Group.

Who's involved in the bid

* Sembawang Corporation - through Sembawang Industrial Pte Ltd
* HPBI - through Straits Maritime Leasing Pte Ltd
* Salim Group - through XMP Pte Ltd

How

* Via - Camerlin Pte Ltd (Camerlin), a wholly owned subsidiary of FCC.
* FCC will own 40% of Camerlin, other share parties will hold 20% each.
* All four will extend loans of S$154 million to Camerlin, in proportion to shareholding.

Takeover details

* Bid - S$4.70 per share
* Takeover offer conditional on Camerlin acquiring at least a 50% control of YHS.

Current Shareholding in YHS

Camerlin - 25.89%
Ng Teng Fong - 24.8%

Background of YHS

The main activity of YHS is the manufacture and distribution of food and beverages. As the franchisee of Pepsi and Pepsi-related products in Singapore, the company has interests in other food and beverage activities internationally. Its U.S. operations, Chun King, were acquired in 1989, but have chalked up losses of about S$45m to date. Shared with the Temasek group in Singapore, the division had been a drag on earnings since acquired. Other significant activities of YHS are in Malaysia through 40% associate YHS (M), China and Canada.

Losses in the company created tension amidst the Yeo family members. There were two main camps; one led by ex-chairman Alan Yeo and the other by director Michael Yeo. Major changes in shareholdings were sparked off by Alan Yeo conducting discussions with garment manufacturer/property developer Wing Tai regarding the latter's purchase of a stake in the company. This was called off but the Yeo Hiap Seng Holdings Pte Ltd, which controlled 36.5% of the listed vehicle, was liquidated. The first round of the feudal property tycoon Ng Teng Fong acquiring 21% of the company, making him the single largest shareholder. Subsequently, Quek Leng Chan had been gradually acquiring his stake in YHS.

* Net Asset Value Per Share calculated based on 142.1 million shares as at 31/12/94
+ Land value derived by multiplying the land area of 474,000 sf, the plot ratio of 1.6 and selling price. The prices used in the sensitivity analysis are based on market prices fetched for sites sold in the same area.

Assuming that the land is developed, development profits are derived after the subtraction of land costs of $66 million and conversion costs of $20.4 million. Profit is assumed to be recognized over 4 years: 10% in both fiscales 1996 and 1999 and 40% in both fiscales 1997-8. The net present value is calculated using cost of debt at 9.82%, the average cost in fiscal 1994.

Conclusion

The bid at $4.70 appears aggressive compared to the net asset backing which ranges from $3.76 to $4.19. However, compared to the 52-week high of $4.42, this represents a premium of only 6.7%. At this point, it would appear unlikely that the battle is over since Mr Ng has not retaliated yet. Although the share price rose to $4.90 today, there appears to be room for further increases.
