S-factor spotlights banks’ high systemic risk

Roy C Smith
16 Apr 2012

This metric, called SRISK, estimates the amount of new capital that banks would have to raise if markets experienced a 40% drop over a short period in a panic situation, such as occurred in 2008.
Please complete all fields in the form to login. Username and password fields are case sensitive

If you have forgotten your username or password please use the forgotten your username/password link below.

Remember me, by ticking the box you are confirming you are happy for your details to be remembered and used the next time you use this computer to visit eFinancialNews.com. By doing this, you'll be able to access restricted content without logging in each time you visit the site.

Username:
Password:

Forgotten your username and/or password

☑ Remember me

Meet the most influential M&A banker you may never have heard of

Is BTG Pactual better than Goldman Sachs?

BlackRock polishes its magic lamp

'Struggling' on $350,000 a year
S-factor spotlights banks’ high systemic risk

http://www.efinancialnews.com/story/2012-04-16/s-factor-spotlights-ban...